Spring Work. After the soil is in fair condition, the sooner the spring grains are in, the better chance there will be for a good crop. Nothing will be gained, however, in disturbing the soil while it is so moist as to stick together when ploughing it. In deed it will only cause it to remain for weeks in a coarse and lumpy condition But as soon as it will fall to pieces and form a friable mass, upon being moved then get in the rye, oats and barley.

Potato Culture to Avoid the Rot.

A letter written by Mr. Jared Wilcox Haverstraw, to one of our correspondents, on the causes and prevention of the potato rot, is sent us for publication It is very probable that the potato crop is injured by injudicious treatment, in the ways to which Mr. Wilcox refers, but that part of his letter is of less interest than the statement he gives of the system of management which has proved emimently successful on his farm:

"I believe in a rotation of crops : and, as hay is a valuable crop with us in this section, I keep my land in grass as long as it will bear a good crop; then I break each hill about a pint. I plant large, him. tubers from the seed are generally all much truth as possible gone, and there is no rot to communicate en and enrich the soil-producing a crop | "translated into action." of potatoes that has always paid me well for my labor, and I have not had five bushels of rotten potatoes in ten years, except from new seed lately purchased seven years, simply because it takes me two or three years to eradicate the rot from the seed that I buy." Mr. Wilcox has observed that the rot first attacks the potato tubers nearest the stalk, often destroying all but those at the extremities of the roots-a fact in support of what is doubtless the correct theory as to the cause of the rot-the theory which ascribes it to a fungus. Observation with regard to the causes of this, fungus, or rather as to the circumstances under which it is most likely to propagate itself, is by no means exhausted, and might be conducted farther to great advantage. - Country Gentleman.

I kept the past season forty-four ewe sheep, natives, with a slight sprinkling of Southdown and Leicester, I used with them a buck lamb which was a cross of the Hampshire Down and Leicester. I "tended the buck" by letting him among the sheep with a rope about his neck, allowed him to serve but two each day, and those but twice each. The buck was kept in the stable and fed with the best of hay, grain and roots, with plenty of water, which kept him strong and vigororous. About three weeks sufficed to serve the flock, when the buck was allowed to run with the sheep. Now for

Two of the ewes had no lambs. Th forty-two dropped fifty-five strong, healthy lambs, which required no extra attention, except a little feeding of some of the twins for a few days. The lambs began to come the first of April. I lost but one of said lambs, and that one was killed by a dog or fox in the pasture. I sold the fifty-four lambs in September for $235, which was better than flocks sold for it this town with no twins among them. The same sheep last year had but three sets of twins, while this year thirteen of them raised twenty-six lambs. I have managed my flocks the same this fall, and shall note the result in the spring .- Jonathan Lawrence, in Mirror.

Brahma Pootra Fowls.

So much has been said in favor of the Brahma Pootra fowls, that it seems hardly worth while to add any more testimony to their excellent qualities, yet it seems to be a duty we owe to the public to make publicly known what is really for General Term, January, 1867, against the use by others of the NUMBER 303 five years in keeping Brahma Pootra

4. Their superior quality for the table cannot be denied. Kill and pick one, And every twenty days thereafter, leaving on the Satand you have something that will do for sanday. For further information apply to the NORTH a meal for a fair sized family. One will weigh as much as two common fowls, and oftentimes more.

Young America. — We are satisfied that in this young horse the breeders of New England have a stallion of very great value to their section of the country. He comes on both sides from pure natural trotting families, both of which were remarkable for their stoutness, as well as the speed of their stock.

Brond and Young America are nearly identified in blood and we think if the trotter. BLOND and Young America are nearly identified in blood, and we think if the stallion had been trained till now he would have been as fast as she is. We have urged his owner to bring him back to the island, and let him have a season on the course. He believes with us that the horse would distinguish himself, and would fain give him the opportunity to do so. But his services at the stud are so highly esteemed, and his produce have already displayed such fine points and such superior speed and action, that he cannot be spared from the stud. He may, however, leave the neighborhood at some date, and meantime, if we lived near him and had a good mare, we would certainly dip into the Gray Messenger and Abdallah blood, of which he is the Fountain.
